Introduction

This book is a productive challenge only to a mind that can wipe its slate clean. It is not meant for casual readers or intellectuals that are prejudiced to their own ideas. Be prepared to stop and go over lines that don't seem quite clear. This is new territory; give it a chance.

The answer is determined by scientific logic through reasoning by the mind of a fourth grader or a person that has the ability to teach this level of learning. A fourth grader's logic is learned enough, but still not contaminated with intellectual illusions, ignorant inhibitions, and superstitions. The proof is in their ability to understand once the premise has been explained to them. You fourth graders, I'm depending on you.

An example of this is Ptolemy's math and observations were that the sun circled the earth and he was wrong with his intellectual illusion. Yet, the intellectuals of the day believed Ptolemy's theory for years. It took Copernicus to straighten it out.

To know the answer to the existence of matter puts a new slant on everything else that we know. The learning never stops.

Before the answer is given in the book, I give important insights so when the reader gets to it, it can be understood.

A Bolt of Lightning

I find myself wondering...This wondering excites me and drives me into a curious state of being. This excited curiosity compels me to make sense of all that I experience.

Because of shallow thinking, prevailing wisdom leaves me empty, so I am on my own with this adventure. I soon realize that I am limited to what I can understand. My curiosity has nothing to anchor to, so I allow it to flow freely in my mind. This allows me to experience a new dimension. By earning the right into this new dimension my mind is now qualified to enter through the door of the unknown. This new dimension requires me to shed ignorant inhibitions and intellectual illusions. This is the point I must reach. My slate is clean. Curiosity is my dynamo. Truth my guide.

As I enter the unknown I am overwhelmed by a mysterious mental fog. I hesitate. I feel lost. There is no where to go. I become fearful. I calm myself and decide to go with what got me this far. I again allow my curiosity to float freely uninhibited without intellectual illusions and superstitions. Then a great awareness appears, a spark without asking. Why? Because it had to. Understanding is revealed to me in a way no human mind could even imagine. I see that I don't have to wade through the mental fog blindly...I see that truth breaks the fog, comes out to greet me and is my escort. Truth tells me it will guide me into the unknown, deep into infinity.

Now we begin to explore...Wow...is this exciting or what? Still with me fourth graders? With our slate clean, free curiosity and truth guide us, we have permission to enter the unknown. Truth reveals a huge revelation into my mind...A conscious thought...Like a bolt of lightning in real time. I become aware of my own mind thinking about itself. Self awareness. It's like awakening from an infinite cradle. This is the most awesome experience in all of eternity. The event horizon in reverse. The point of the beginning of time. The big bang of existence. One might say, but why is this the beginning? Surely there was life and events before this. Well...That's only true when we look back and create events with our imagination that we now have. Before we awakened and
